

Topic: Art programs ( microtransactions) 2045 Annie Peng

Have you ever purchased an expensive item? But only to find out that you have assembled all of the 157 thousand pieces?! Well, that's how I feel about art programs. I love online art programs, but I don't like the difficult ones. Many art programs have a lot of apps that require payment, because of their extensive functions. For example, Procreate! Procreate has a lot of fonts, quality, water buckets, and they have more brushes than ibis paint x. Art programs such as Procreate or Adobe are challenging because of their complex functions. I want to purchase Procreate, but I'm scared that I'll buy it, only to be disappointed ,because I don't know how to use it. This is a significant issue because it discourages me and many others. Art programs mitigate many people from creating works of art, and therefore, I will talk about the problems these complex programs cause due to them being costly and difficult.

First, I will talk about Problem: Now, you may ask, what makes this a problem? How do these costly apps affect those who want to create and share art with the world? First, people will waste their money on apps they don't know how to use, so they will be very sad because they lost most of their money for an app they can't use. Some subscriptions only last for one year. This affects younger kids who purchase complex apps, because they Don't know how to use the app, and Waste their money because they feel discouraged in figuring out how these functions work. Degree programs in Fine Arts typically have a narrow focus on academic curriculum, and training, that will help students hone their craft, so they can become professionals in art, theater, music, photography, ceramics, printmaking, and other studio arts.

Secondly, There are countless reasons that motivate the creation of art; some of them are making our surroundings more beautiful; creating records of a specific time, place, person or object; and expressing and communicating ideas. ... Art allows us to learn about different times from the past and also about ourselves.

How do art programs help enhance people's ability to do art? Art programs have the potential to help improve a student's memory and concentration skills, develop decision-making and critical thinking skills, enhance communication and listening skills, but also encourage focus and discipline. ... An arts education can also help a student to improve self-esteem and social skills.

People/students use art to earn money to help others like kids in hospitals who have bad injuries.